Beyond the Logo

Visual clues that trigger brand recognition without a logo

How shapes, colors, and packaging help us identify brands

Kaan Yazıcıoğlu & Can Akcasu

Visual Quiz: Can Color Alone Identify a Brand?

Classroom illustration: Four plain color swatches with no logos

Solid red, yellow, turquoise, and blue without shapes

Can you name the brand behind each color?

Sources: [S1]

Visual Quiz: Adding Product Shapes to Colors

Classroom illustration: Silhouette and cropped packaging textures

A bottle silhouette alongside fry carton, gift box, and tote textures

Adding packaging shapes and textures narrows down the choices

Sources: [S1], [S2]

The Reveal: Learned Brand Connections in Daily Life

Recognition comes from repeated exposure during everyday shopping · Familiar shapes and colors trigger brand memory without names

Coca-Cola

Contour Glass Bottle

McDonald's

Red Fry Packaging

Tiffany & Co.

Tiffany Blue Box

IKEA

FRAKTA Shopping Bag

Sources: [S1], [S2]

How Brand Memory Works: Context Beats Color Myths

Popular assumptions claim colors carry fixed commercial meanings

Marketing research shows brand recognition comes from consistent use

Context and learned familiarity turn colors into reliable shortcuts

1. Repeated Exposure

↓

2. Familiar Visual Clue

↓

3. Possible Brand Recognition

Sources: [S1]

Case 1: Coca-Cola and the 1915 Bottle Challenge

Soft drinks in 1915 used plain straight-sided bottles

Design brief asked for a bottle recognized by touch

Goal: recognize the bottle without seeing its label

Original contour glass bottle

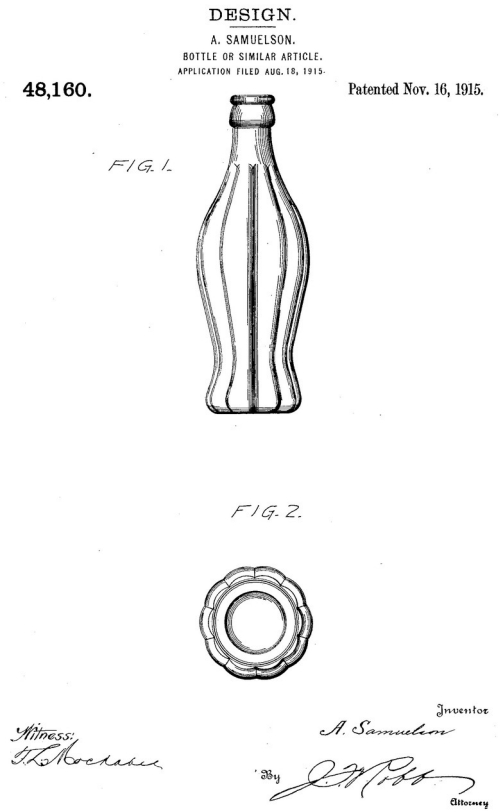

Sources: [S4]

Coca-Cola: The 1915 Fluted Bottle Design

Original patent granted on November 16, 1915

Design inspired by the curved lines of a cocoa bean

Vertical ribs and curved sides create a clear shape

DESIGN.

A. SAMUELSON.

BOTTLE OR SIMILAR ARTICLE.

APPLICATION FILED AUG. 18, 1915.

48,160. Patented Nov. 16, 1915.

FIG. 1.

FIG. 2.

Witness:

Inventor

A. Samuelson

By

Attorney

US Design Patent D48,160 (Nov 16, 1915)

Sources: [S4]

Shape Still Matters Without Color

Comparing the bottle silhouette with the patent drawing

The fluted bottle silhouette stays recognizable in black and white

A familiar shape can remain a useful clue

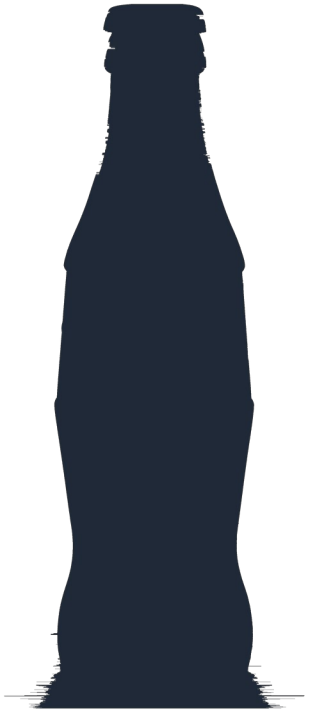

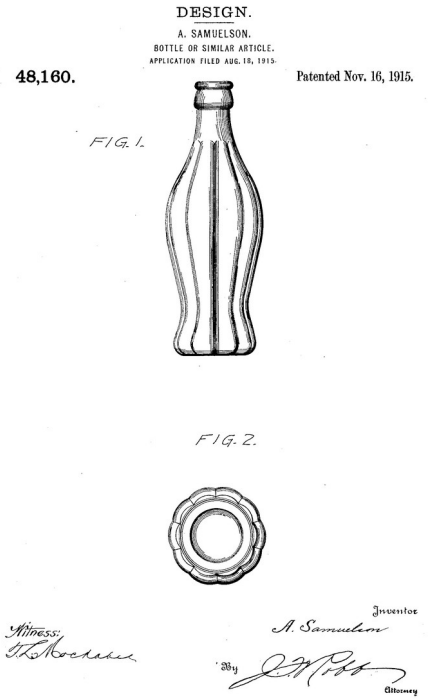

Photo-derived silhouette

1915 drawing

Sources: [S4]

McDonald’s: More Than Red and Yellow

Red fry carton paired with bright yellow french fries

Simple packaging shape works together with brand colors

Color combination and packaging create a familiar visual clue

Red paperboard fry carton

Sources: [S1], [S3]

McDonald’s: European Green and Cropped Arches

Some European restaurants changed red background to deep green (reported 2009)

Golden arches stayed unchanged while background colors changed

Cropped arches are logo fragments with text, not color-only

Follow the Arches campaign (Cossette, 2018)

Sources: [S8], [S9]

Case 3: Tiffany Blue and Luxury Packaging

Signature turquoise color chosen in the nineteenth century

Famous gift box is tied with a white satin ribbon

Customers connect the box color with special jewelry gifts

The Tiffany Blue Box

Sources: [S5]

Tiffany: Store Rules and Presentation

Strict store presentation policies protect the blue gift box

Company lore cites 1906 report: boxes given only with purchases

Keep the blue consistent across boxes and shopping bags

Sources: [S5]

Tiffany: Standard Color and Trademark Scope

Registered Tiffany Blue as a color trademark in 1998

Standardized custom color with Pantone as 1837 Blue

Protection covers luxury jewelry boxes, not all turquoise products

Approximate screen color — not the official Pantone standard. No exact color guarantee.

Sources: [S5]

Case 4: IKEA and Store Color Standardization

First brand manual in 1984 set clear identity rules

Red-and-white logos stayed in Scandinavia for many years

Blue warehouse buildings with yellow signs spread from 1991

Standardized warehouse architecture (from 1991)

Sources: [S6]

IKEA: The Blue FRAKTA Shopping Bag

Durable blue shopping bag created for carrying home products

Blue woven handles feature bright yellow brand lettering

Everyday practical use turned the bag into a familiar clue

FRAKTA shopping bag

Sources: [S7]

Limits of Single Colors: Shared Brand Clues

Single colors are shared by many competing commercial brands

Red is shared by Coca-Cola, Target, and McDonald's

Yellow is shared by IKEA, Shell, and DHL

Shared Red

Red is shared by Coca-Cola, Target, and McDonald's

Shared Yellow

Yellow is shared by IKEA, Shell, and DHL

Sources: [S1], [S3]

Combining Visual Clues: Color, Shape, and Context

Visual clues work best when supporting each other together

Pairing color with shape reduces confusion for shoppers

Recognition depends on shopper familiarity and daily habits

Color and Shape

+

Familiarity and Habits

= Easier Brand Recognition

Sources: [S1], [S2], [S3]

Redesign Risks: Protecting Familiar Visual Clues

Brand assets are long-term investments built over many years

Shoppers rely on fast visual habits when browsing shelves

Rapid redesigns risk breaking familiar memory connections

Long-Term Brand Assets

Rapid Redesign Risks

Sources: [S2]

Practical Guidelines for Distinctive Design

01 Rule 1: Build clear shapes recognizable without color

02 Rule 2: Pair colors with distinctive packaging silhouettes

03 Rule 3: Core cues can evolve with testing, grounded in consistency

Sources: [S1], [S2], [S3]

Conclusion: Distinctive Clues in Daily Life

- Logos confirm a brand, but visual clues guide discovery
- Packaging and colors help shoppers spot products quickly
- Recognition grows through patient consistency and daily familiarity

Sources: [S1]

Thanks for Listening to Us!

Any questions or observations?

Presented by

Kaan Yazıcıoğlu & Can Akcasu

References: Research Studies and Corporate Archives

[S1] Brand differentiation research
Australasian Marketing Journal / Ehrenberg-Bass Institute for Marketing Science

[S2] Seven Costly Sins of Brand Identity
Ehrenberg-Bass Institute for Marketing Science

[S3] Brands of Distinction
Ehrenberg-Bass Institute for Marketing Science / UniSA Business Magazine

[S4] The Coca-Cola Contour Bottle
The Coca-Cola Company

[S5] Tiffany Blue
Tiffany & Co.

References: Museum Archives, News and Agency Records

[S6] History of the IKEA Logotype
IKEA Museum / Inter IKEA Systems B.V.

[S7] The Story of FRAKTA
IKEA Museum / Inter IKEA Systems B.V.

[S8] McDonald’s Green Backgrounds
NBC News / The Associated Press

[S9] Follow the Arches
Cossette

Appendix: Image Credits and Attributions (Part 1)

McDonald's French Fries in Red Carton
Creator: Filippos Fragkogiannis
License: CC BY-SA 4.0
Source · License

McDonald's 'Follow the Arches' Billboard
Creator: Cossette / McDonald's Restaurants of Canada Limited
License: Copyrighted; no reuse license stated; included for classroom commentary
Source / rights information

Coca-Cola Classic Contour Bottle
Creator: Ralf Roletschek
License: Public domain
Source · Rights information

1915 Coca-Cola Contour Bottle Patent Drawing
Creator: Alexander Samuelson / Chapman J. Root / US Patent Office
License: Public domain
Source · Rights information

Appendix: Image Credits and Attributions (Part 2)

Tiffany & Co. Blue Gift Box
Creator: Adriana Górak
License: CC BY-SA 3.0
Source · License

IKEA Warehouse Store Exterior
Creator: Ben MacLeod
License: CC BY-SA 4.0
Source · License

IKEA Blue FRAKTA Shopping Bag
Creator: Andrea014
License: CC BY-SA 3.0 de
Source · License